Tribal members debate extent of danger posed by ICE

By Nicole Montesano
Smoke Signals staff writer

Tribal members and Tribal Council members debated the extent of the danger posed to Tribal members by Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents at a Tribal Council meeting Wednesday, Jan. 14, following a week that included an ICE agent killing a woman in Minneapolis and the non-fatal shooting of two people in Portland. None of the people shot were Native American. However, there have been reports of people from different Tribes being detained or questioned by ICE and being told their Tribal identification, which complies with the federal REAL ID Act, is not legitimate.

Tribal member Justine Flynn told council members she was unhappy that it had failed to develop a policy regarding ICE.

“Citizens of federally recognized Tribes are being detained and questioned by federal agents about their citizenship,” she said. “Federal agents are accusing Native people of carrying fake Tribal IDs and then taking them from them. I recently watched a federal agent gun down a woman, in the face, in front of people and nothing happened. You have the privilege of sitting in a position of government that most impacts members of this community. That means two things. This is where we are most likely to be heard and this is where we expect our voices to be most reflected.”

Flynn emphasized she was unhappy that Tribal Council has not

Tribal Council meets with Oregon Secretary of State

By Nicole Montesano
Smoke Signals staff writer

A visit in mid-January with Oregon Secretary of State Tobias Read provided Tribal Council with an opportunity to acquaint him with the Tribe’s history and concerns, Tribal Council Vice Chair Chris Mercier said.

Read, who was raised in Idaho and moved to Oregon to attend college, spent the afternoon of Wednesday, Jan. 14, visiting the Tribal campus for a meeting with Tribal officials and a chance to better understand the issues that occasionally come up at the state level.

“I’m trying to think of the last time a secretary of state came out here,” Mercier said. “He’s a cool guy.”

Although Read won’t have authority over many of the issues that come up between the state and the Tribe, Mercier said, Read had wanted to make sure he understood them, something the Tribe appreciated.

“He said he was embarrassed that he still had a lot to learn about the Tribes and meeting on their home grounds was a good way to gain more familiarity

First foods are still revered by the Grand Ronde Tribe today and harvested by many Tribal members across Oregon, Tribal Cultural Policy Analyst Greg Archuleta told his audience in a January lecture.

Archuleta, a Tribal Elder, is participating in the Wildlife and Water Friendly Gardens series currently being offered by the Clackamas Community College Environmental Learning Center in Oregon City. It features presentations from Tribal members and organizations about traditional Indigenous perspectives and practices focused on protecting wildlife and watershed health.

Tribe offering support to incarcerated members

Grand Ronde Tribal members who are incarcerated, have been recently released from prison or are involved in addiction treatment programs don't have to face challenges alone.

The Tribe has a post-prison/post-treatment peer support specialist, Tribal member Joe Ulestad, who is also a certified recovery mentor.

"I want our members who are incarcerated or need help to know we haven't forgotten about them and we're here to help," he said. "They can call me, email or text."

Ulestad can be reached at joe.ulestad@grandronde.org, by text/call at 971-237-5262 or on office line, 503-879-1389. ■

Food Bank news

The Grand Ronde Food Bank – iskam mək'hmək haws – is operated by Marion Polk Food Share, which has been leading the fight to end hunger since 1987 because no one should be hungry.

Recipients of SNAP, TANF, SSI or LIHEAP assistance automatically qualify for assistance at the Grand Ronde Food Bank, 9675 Grand Ronde Road. No one will be turned away in need of a food box.

“We believe that everyone deserves to have enough to eat,” Food Bank Coordinator Francene Ambrose says. “You are welcome to get a food box at each of our regular weekly distributions. No one will be turned away in need of a food box.”

The Food Bank will hold February food box distributions from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Fridays. In addition, there is a light food box (mostly bread and produce) distribution from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesdays.

People must check in 15 minutes before closing to receive a food box on both days. If you need immediate assistance, call 211 or visit 211info.org.

Those who are unable to pick up a food box can fill out an authorized representative form and that designated person can pick up a food box on your behalf. The authorization is good for one year.

The Food Bank continues to seek volunteers to help with repacking food, putting food on the shelves, handing out food boxes, end-of-month inventory and picking up food donations at area stores.

Call to ensure someone is available to assist. People also can sign up for a monthly email for the Food Bank calendar and events, as well as follow the Food Bank on Facebook.

The Food Bank is an equal opportunity provider. Contact Ambrose at 503-879-3663 or fambrose@marionpolkfoodshare.org for more information or to volunteer. ■ 2021 — Funding awarded to the Tribe from the Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security Act enabled the Tribal Council Chambers and conference room to be equipped with technology upgrades to allow the audience and Tribal Council members to better participate in meetings remotely. The Tribe received $45 million in emergency aid funding and used $182,000 for the technology upgrades to enable remote meeting attendance and participation.

2016 — After hearing testimony from Tribal representatives, the Oregon Board of Education approved a resolution and rule to allow schools to keep their Native mascots if they could reach a formal agreement with a local Tribe about acceptable imagery and integrate Native studies into their curriculum. Grand Ronde wanted to work with local schools in order to foster understanding and appreciation of Tribal culture.

2011 — After reaching a three-year deal with the Portland Rose Festival Foundation, Spirit Mountain Casino became the new official sponsor of the Portland Rose Festival’s Grand Floral Parade.

2006 — The Tribal Library was close to reaching capacity after a year of growth in usage, as well as books, videos and magazines. Tribal Librarian Marion Mercier said the library had gone from 884 items circulated in 2004 to 3,025 in 2005. She attributed the increase in part to the public internet connection the library had added on its computers. The library had also joined the state library’s EBSCO database research system, which was set to provide each Tribal library in the state with a complete new computer system for patrons.

2001 — For a second year, the Spirit Mountain Community Fund provided support for the Oregon Zoo Foundation’s Birds of Prey outreach program. The program introduced predatory birds to 15,000 students in Polk, Marion and Yamhill counties, and stressed the importance of environmental stewardship.

1996 — The Tribe’s Fish & Wildlife Program intended to use a grant from the National Marine Fisheries Service, shared with the Polk County Soil and Water Conservation Services, to employ fishers to help complete the Tribe’s new day use park on the reservation and plant between 4,000 and 8,000 trees on reservation lands.

1991 — After three months of setbacks, the Tribe successfully relocated Tribal offices from the old manor building to a new modular office complex. The manor building had housed the Tribes’ offices since 1987 but had problems with wiring and fire safety codes.

1986 — The Tribe’s Reservation Plan document had been finalized and submitted to the Department of the Interior on time, but the Tribe had discovered that a great deal of work still had to be completed before a bill could be submitted to Congress, Tribal Council Chair Mark Mercier said. The Tribe was soliciting letters of support from the surrounding counties, churches and social organizations, and meeting with aides for Oregon Rep. Les AuCoin, to address his concerns.

Tribal Council approves contract with consulting firm People Optimize Partners

By Danielle Harrison

Smoke Signals editor

Tribal Council approved a consulting contract with the human resources consulting firm People Optimize Partners during its Wednesday, Jan. 14, meeting.

The contract is for up to $250,000 and will be utilized to develop a plan to help manage growth of the Tribal workforce.

According to its website, People Optimize Partners “brings curiosity and expertise to your people, process and technology practices to help your people and organization thrive.”

Specifically, it offers services such as “HR tech implementation, benefits strategy, compensation guidance and interim HR leadership to help companies optimize their workforce and achieve sustained performance, working with clients to build scalable, effective people operations.”

“This will be for the organizational assessment work we’ll be taking on with our department managers later this year,” Tribal Council Chief of Staff Stacia Hernandez said during a Tuesday, Jan. 13, Legislative Action Committee meeting. “It is scalable, so there is an opportunity to come in under $250,000.”

She continued, “We’ll be able to share out all of the information with managers and council... We’ll schedule kickoff meetings at the end of the month... and the really exciting thing about this work is it really will be driven by our staff and is an inclusive process, so no one is left out of the fold. The main reason for this work is that we’ve grown so rapidly over the years and want to make sure we’re filling in gaps, identifying any issue areas and working with managers to streamline communications and improve the culture and wellbeing of the organization.”

Tribal Council member Tonya Gleason-Shepek noted that when some people hear the words “organizational assessment,” it can create fear.

“I want to ensure everybody it is not our intention to remove employees or anyone getting fired,” she said. “That’s not what this is about. I wanted to put that out there to hopefully address any fear that might come from hearing that.”

In other action, Tribal Council:

- Approved a limited waiver of sovereign immunity for software company Esri, which has all of the Tribal ceded lands data. The company won’t make a change to its binding arbitration until the end of the year when the next contract renewal begins;
- Approved a $411,000 contract with Advance Native Construction of Aumsville for the Tribal Housing Department roofing project at Raven Loop and Tilixam Circle;
- And approved enrollments for two infants and emergency enrollments for two non-infants into the Tribe because they meet the requirements under the Tribal Constitution and Enrollment Ordinance.

Tribe keeping an eye on federal trends

By Nicole Montesano
Smoke Signals staff writer

Earlier this year, the federal Department of Energy asked the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to adopt a policy to remove the ability of Tribes to veto preliminary hydropower projects on their lands, a move that was opposed by numerous Tribes.

Grand Ronde hasn't taken a position on that change, Tribal Ceded Lands Manager Michael Karnosh said, because it doesn't directly affect the Tribe.

"There aren't currently any hydro projects on Tribal lands ... for us, it is all on ceded lands," he said.

The Tribe is still awaiting a decision by a federal judge on Portland General Electric's effort to take ownership of Willamette Falls from the state. Expected last summer, that decision has now been more than seven months in the making.

However, Karnosh said, the DOE's request is "alarming because it's part of this larger trend that's going on across the ceded lands of the Tribes. It's hard to believe anyone would advise for a Tribe not to be able to veto a project on their lands. ... It's a shock that the DOE would want to try to insult Tribal sovereignty to that extent, and it just brings to light all the other environmental setbacks. They set them in motion last spring and summer, and they just keep coming, but we're learning to keep a better eye on what the feds do."

He said the Tribe has been seeing that, overall, "Things are getting streamlined. Whole pieces are going missing and Tribes are not as empowered as they were years ago. Another concerning trend is that the agencies that talk to Tribes most often have seen a lot of personnel cuts. It might not be project staff, but the liaison staff who know the history and understand the Tribes' concerns – those people are gone."

Those mass federal layoffs affected multiple departments and projects.

"Land management agencies such as the U.S. Forest Service terminated all non-wildfire seasonal positions with no plan to ever back-fill them, which means that most of the archaeologists, botanists and other specialists that have been conducting Tribal consultation on forest activities with Grand Ronde for decades are now just...gone," Karnosh said. "The Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) eliminated thousands more positions at land management, environmental and other resource agencies charged with protecting Tribally important species, habitats, sites and other resources on the landscape, with no apparent plan to ever replace/restore their functions or capacities."

Fortunately, Karnosh said, "Grand Ronde has our own staff, so we have a good team. ... There are a number of other actions over the last year that have really had an impact on the Tribe's ability to confer meaningfully on ceded lands."

In addition, "The president issued several executive orders allowing for the fast-tracking or side-stepping of established federal environmental laws ... on projects that are related to energy, timber production and mineral production," Karnosh said. "The administration and federal courts combined to abolish the Council on Environmental Quality guidelines and to severely restrict the definition of 'Waters of the United States' through rulemaking."

Karnosh explained that "Grand Ronde has seven ratified treaties with the United States, under which it ceded title to its homelands (but nothing else) to the U.S. Under the Reserved Rights Doctrine, the Tribe retains any and all rights it did not expressly give up in the treaties and the U.S. government has the obligation of protecting those Tribal rights and interests under its jurisdiction within the ceded lands. In other words, before taking any action that could kill/damage/destroy Tribal rights and resources (native salmon, camas fields, water quality, Tribal archaeological sites) the feds must first consult properly with the Tribe among other requirements."

Last April, the Tribe drafted a letter sent out to all agencies with whom the Tribe has interactions, emphasizing that point.

In May, Tribal Council followed it with a resolution declaring that the Tribe recognizes major federal environmental laws, "as they existed in their forms and functions on March 20, 2023, as the standard for minimally sufficient federal law for these purposes."

The resolution states that changes to those laws "resulting in levels of protection and restoration below the baseline standard for Tribal rights and resources will not sufficiently uphold the Tribe's treaty rights or the federal trust responsibility toward the Tribe."

The laws at issue included the Clean Water Act, the National Environmental Policy Act, the National Historic Preservation Act, the Endangered Species Act, the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, the Clean Air Act, and "similar federal laws and regulations."

The letter was written by Karnosh, in consultation with Tribal Council Chief of Staff Stacia Hernandez and Interim General Manager Bryan Langley. It reminds federal agency staff that "The United States has a unique relationship with Indian Tribes, known as the federal trust responsibility. This heightened duty of care for the rights and resources of Indian Tribes is based on valid, well-established executive orders, federal statutes and Supreme Court case law. Similar obligations toward Tribes can be found in state and local law. Government agencies have a responsibility to consult with Tribes when actions have the potential to affect resources important to the Tribes. Consultation is defined by Grand Ronde as 'an equal dialogue between sovereign nations or their agencies at the highest levels of decision-making. Consultation is an ongoing and meaningful dialogue; this means that consultation takes place until project completion, not just until the consultation window is done.' Each Tribal nation has the sovereign right to practice consultation in its own way.'

The letter also reminds agencies that "Treaties with Indian Tribes are recognized in Article VI (6) of the Constitution as the 'supreme law of the land.' Any rights not specifically given up in the text of a treaty are reserved by Indian Tribes. These rights included, but are not limited to, hunting, fishing, gathering and access. Specific to cultural resources, Indian Tribes retain the right to access, steward and protect cultural resources, (including natural resources such as fish, water and wildlife) within the treaty-defined area. Any government action potentially impacting treaty rights, interests and/or resources must fulfill Tribal consultation with the affected Tribe(s)."

It notes that "fast tracking projects through consultation and/or reducing consultation resources does not uphold the government's responsibility to Tribes. Such streamlining or resource depletion is an improper, unjust and unlawful abrogation of sovereign trust and treaty rights held by Tribal nations." ■

SMGI Board of Directors has new leadership

By Danielle Harrison
Smoke Signals editor

The Spirit Mountain Gaming Inc. Board of Directors has undergone several changes in the past year-plus, both in leadership and board member makeup.

Former longtime Tribal Council chairman and SMGI board member Reyn Leno is now the board chair, while current Tribal Council member Toby McClary serves as board vice chair.

The previous chair was Tribal Elder Andy Jenness and the vice chair was Tribal Council member Kathleen George. Leno also served as chair before Jenness was selected in 2021. Jenness is no longer on the board but George still serves on it.

Other newer board members include Tribal member Harris Reibach and Tribal Council member Pete Wakeland.

Reyn Leno

Leno was appointed to the board in December 2024, while Reibach, McClary and Wakeland were appointed in September 2025.

Leno previously served on the board for 25 years and had a 21-year stint on Tribal Council. Currently, he serves as chair of the Tribe's Fish & Wildlife Committee.

"I got involved in the board right after (Spirit Mountain) casino opened (in 1995)," he said.

Leno said he decided to serve as board chair due to his previous experience and a desire to stay busy and involved in the Tribe.

"I'm right here locally so it's easy for me to be involved," he said.

"Right now, the casino is a little flat and I'm concerned with what I have seen...That's the revenue that goes to serve our membership, our kids and grandkids. ... Being a past Tribal Council member also helps with being a good go-between between the Tribal Council and the board."

Other SMGI Board members include Tribal Council members Matthew Haller and Tonya Gleason-Shepek, as well as Tribal members Matthew Kirkland, Lisa Watson and Justin Martin, and non-Tribal member Drew Mahalic, who is former CEO of the nonprofit Oregon Sports Authority.

As per the website, the SMGI

Board is "responsible for protecting Spirit Mountain Casino and the Confederated Tribes of Grand Ronde shareholder interests, establishing policies for management, supporting executives and their teams, maintaining company resources, setting general company goals, making sure that (Spirit Mountain Casino) is equipped with the tools it needs to be managed well, and general oversight of the corporation and making decisions about important issues that the company faces."

Hunting and fishing rights were discussed with their histories and issues of importance to them,” Mercier said.

Since Tribal law can intersect with so many different areas of state governance, the issues can be complex.

“I appreciate the Tribal Council, the staff of the Natural Resources Department and members of the Confederated Tribes of the Grand Ronde for welcoming me and taking the time to meet,” Read said in an email. “These conversations are essential to understanding the Tribe’s key priorities and to strengthening our partnerships and I look forward to continuing this important work together.”

Mercier said the visit began at Natural Resources, with explanations about the department’s functions and the Tribe’s ceded lands.

“We went over everything that’s happened with the memorandum of agreement (expanding Grand Ronde’s hunting, fishing and gathering areas) and everything that happened with the (state) in July and our efforts to mitigate the request by other Tribes to have the MOA repealed,” Mercier said.

In July 2025, the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife Commission voted 4-to-2 to accept a petition by four Tribes – Nez Perce, Yakama, Warm Spring and Umatilla – asking to amend or repeal the Tribe’s MOA with the state of Oregon. Nez Perce and Yakama are not Oregon Tribes.

“We wanted to make sure he understood our position,” Mercier said. “Tribes from outside the state should not have veto power and should not be consulted the same as Tribes inside the state...I told him, our history with other Tribes is not always a positive history. They won’t admit it, but the fervent opposition to all things Grand Ronde doesn’t always seem to me to lie within the reasons that are stated publicly. So, we spent a good chunk of time talking about hunting and fishing.”

In addition, Mercier said, Read discussed the state’s corporation division and opportunities for partnerships with the Tribe. Mercier said the council asked whether there might be training sessions or resources available for Tribal members who want to open their own businesses but find the registration system cumbersome.

The state does offer workshops and classes on “navigating the maze of paperwork and permitting processes,” Mercier said.

Classes are offered through the state’s network of small business development centers, which are located locally in Lincoln City and Salem. Classes and more information may be located at oregonsbdc.org.

The state business information center offers some guidelines at sos.oregon.gov/business/Pages/business-information-center.aspx.

Voting issues also came up, Mercier said, noting that the Tribe’s turn out for state and federal elections is about half that of the state average of 60 to 70% – “close to the level of county elections,” Mercier said.

Read asked whether the state could be of assistance in “Get out the vote” campaigns, Mercier said, but added, “It’s a little tricky ... half the membership does not live in the state.”

Read oversees the state archives, among his other duties, and Mercier said the Tribe learned that it’s possible there are old Tribal records, undiscovered among the trove of microfiche and old papers stored away, but “it would take quite a bit of effort” to locate them. ■

Tribe will look to develop policy

yet put together a policy in the event that Tribal members are detained.

“How do you proceed?” she said. “What would you expect of this community? What would you ask us to do? What is the role of Tribal police? I can tell you this; I’ll be there to meet them when they arrive and I know that I will not be alone. I will not let them take anybody, whether that requires violence or not. What if ICE tried to arrest me for intervening? ... Would you expect Tribal police to allow them to take other people that are standing up and protecting people?”

Tribal Elder Jack Giffen Jr. said that he does not consider federal agents a threat.

“I guess I got a different perspective,” he said. “They’ve got a job — ICE has got a job to do. There’s over a million people that came into this country undocumented and you just seen the two people in Portland. Some of them are pretty violent people. Here at the reservation, there ain’t even one of us that isn’t a documented citizen of the United States. We were born here. We got a roll number with the federal government. I think they got a tough job and every time we try to throw up a roadblock, they can’t do their job, and it makes it even tougher.”

In addition, Giffen said, “the bottom line is our sovereignty is governed by the federal government. You know, if we throw a roadblock up to the government agents coming in, they could take that sovereignty away in a heartbeat. They’ve done it once already. So, you know, I’d be cautious, telling the federal government you can’t come on our property. Cause the property’s held by them.”

Several people, including Flynn, responded to Giffen’s comments. “It was once legal for federal agents to come in and take kids,” she said. “That was legal. They were doing their job. They had a job to do and they took our kids and they put ‘em in boarding schools. It was once legal for them to show up on our Tribal lands and move us wherever they wanted to. They were just doing their job; it was legal. It doesn’t mean it was OK and it doesn’t mean that we comply. We didn’t, in those scenarios. The trauma that came out of things like that, we are still experiencing.”

Giffen said he is concerned about criminal behavior.

“You gotta uphold the laws, whether you like them or not,” he said. “If you don’t like ‘em, change ‘em. Get together and change ‘em. But you uphold the ones you got.”

Tribal Council members said they don’t support federal agents being able to come onto the Tribal campus. Council members Lisa Leno and Matthew Haller said they agreed that council should have acted sooner to develop a policy.

“I definitely think that’s something that needs to be a priority and people need to, like you said, people really do need to understand what that would mean in our community, what are the protocols,” Leno said, adding that she expects council to hold a work session “very, very soon.”

Haller told Flynn, “That’s a priority in my eyes. ... And sure, I’ll be right beside you; you call me, and I’ll be one of the people with my boots on the ground on the front line with you.”

Later in the meeting, Haller noted that “In McMinnville, Oregon, not too long ago, a high school student on his lunch break was taken by ICE. ... McMinnville was targeted. Just last night, at their City Council meeting on January 13, there was just a distraught meeting, and a line of high school kids that got up and told testimonies of being fearful to leave campus to go to lunch. That requires some type of protection in my eyes. My daughter leaves the Willamina campus every single day to go to lunch. What if she was just taken or detained? I’m sorry, but I don’t care what your federal jurisdiction is, I’m not OK with that.”

Tribal Interim General Manager Bryan Langley said he plans to pull in department heads to help craft a policy and would call on Flynn, among others, for her input.

Tribal Council Chief of Staff Stacia Hernandez said the Tribe “can also verify Tribal enrollment outside office hours, also, if there’s a need or if we hear of a situation, put ourselves in a position where we can respond quickly and advocate to get anyone potentially out of custody.”

She added that “I will say that our delegation has been super responsive as well, so we continue to work with them very closely.”

Tribal Council Vice Chair Chris Mercier noted that “ICE has been around for a while,” but said he finds recent behavior by agents “pretty appalling and it just seems to me that they’re terrorizing certain communities and I don’t like what I’m seeing. Having said that, I don’t want us to be in a position to where a situation can escalate and we see violence like what we saw in Minneapolis last week. I want to be able to protect our people, but I don’t want to put us in a situation where things can blow up and more people get hurt or even worse.”

Others who spoke on the issue included Tribal member Katherine Warren, Tribal Elder Darlene Aaron, Tribal Elder Reyn Leno and Tribal Elder Linda Olson.

Tribal Elder Denise Harvey told the council that “I did get several calls from the Oklahoma Tribes, this morning, that ICE was raiding their campuses. So, they were on high alert with that situation and that was this morning. And Justine was correct, there have been many, many Tribes that have put out statements for their members. I have shared those, I’m sure many people have seen them. I shared them because I hadn’t seen anything from our Tribe and I at least wanted to give people some thought process on how people are handling that situation.”

On Thursday, Jan. 15, United Indian Nations of Oklahoma issued an advisory to Tribal citizens across Oklahoma to “remain vigilant and to carry Tribal identification, along with any state or federally issued identification they may possess.” It noted that four enrolled members of the Oglalla Sioux and an Ojibwe/Red Lake Nation descendent had been detained in Minnesota and a member of Arizona’s Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community had been detained in Iowa.

The press release also contained guidance issued by the Native American Rights Fund, for both minor and adult Tribal citizens, about how to respond if approached by immigration agents.

It included the following advice:

- You have the right to remain silent;
- Do not lie or physically resist;
- Do not open the door if at home unless the agent has a signed judicial warrant.

Free weekly workshops are presented on Zoom

The free weekly workshops are presented on Zoom at noon every Thursday through February. Signup is available online, at eventbrite.com/e/wildlife-water-friendly-gardens-free-series-2026-tickets-1964503064549.

During the second workshop Jan. 15, Archuleta spoke about Tribal oral histories and how first foods still play an important role for many Tribal members.

Future presentations will include a talk on “Reconstructing Willamette Valley Environments,” by Tribal Elder and anthropologist David G. Lewis Feb. 12, and one on “Indigenous Partnerships and Restoration,” by Archuleta on Feb. 19.

Some of the most important foods relied on by Indigenous people in the Willamette Valley were camas, cow parsnip, berries, nettles, tarweed, yampah, white oak acorns, hazelnuts and wapato, Archuleta said.

Today, Tribal members sometimes plant them in home gardens. Before contact with European settlers, Tribes encouraged the growth of useful plants in a variety of ways and also traveled regularly to different sites where particular foods were in season.

Camas, which grows in wet soil conditions, was found throughout the Willamette Valley, Archuleta said, and was “a very important first food.” The Tribe still has gathering areas throughout western Oregon.

Common camas, which has edible bulbs, also grows alongside a more dangerous companion, known as death camas.

“The bulbs are pretty similar so you have to be pretty careful,”

David G. Lewis

Archuleta said. “There are some stories about settlers thinking they were getting wild onions and it turned out to be death camas.”

The Tribes, however, considered death camas a useful plant.

“We consider it a medicine and people knew how to fix it in a way that would just make you throw up when you needed to have that happen,” he said.

Using digging sticks often made from serviceberry wood, Tribes would gather camas bulbs in large quantities in the fall after flowering was finished and bake them for two or three days in underground earth ovens, sometimes pouring in water to create steam. The lengthy baking transforms the inulin in the bulbs to a more digestible form, Archuleta said.

“Lewis and Clark traded for camas on their journey and a lot of times they had stomach problems due to not preparing it properly,” Archuleta said.

Clackamas people, he said, would bake the tubers and store them for winter, while the Kalapuya people mashed the cooked bulbs into large cakes and dehydrated them. The dried cakes were a popular trade item at Tumwata, Archuleta said.

The stalks of cow parsnip and nettle could be peeled, steamed and eaten as a vegetable when young, he said. Strawberries, salmonberries and thimbleberries were generally enjoyed raw, while serviceberries were dried and stored for winter. People also harvested huckleberries and blue elderberries, he said.

Tarweed, a kind of wild sunflower, was valued for its seeds. In August, Archuleta said, Tribes would set fires to “burn up the tarry substance” the plants are named for, then use seed fans to knock the seeds into gathering baskets.

“Then they would grind them into flour and often use it as a kind of addition to hazelnuts or acorns,” he said. “It was pretty extensive in the Willamette Valley and southern Oregon. After contact, a lot of these were removed due to pasturing; they didn’t like to get the tarry substance on the animals. You pretty much get that scent all over you.”

Yampah, which looks similar to Queen Anne’s lace (a flowering plant) and has largely been supplanted by it, was another popular vegetable, often eaten boiled.

“They have a really nice taste, kind of like a yam” Archuleta said, noting that the seeds and leaves are also edible. “But watch for similar-looking hemlock (which is poisonous). You really have to know your plants.”

The name Champog, Archuleta said, is a corruption of the name for “place of yampah,” tchampuick.

There’s been significant yampah restoration at the Champog State Park site, Archuleta said, and when the Tribe was consulted about restoring the landscape, they made sure yampah was included.

Tribes made extensive use of Oregon white oak acorns, developing different methods to remove the tannins, Archuleta said. Some cracked the acorns and stored them in baskets in streams for a period of time, while others ground them into flour first, then ran either hot or cold water through the meal.

“It’s nice to see the old oaks surviving today that probably provided acorns to our ancestors,” he said.

Hazelnuts were another important food source and the Tribes set fires to encourage new growth.

“Today, there’s a lot of hazel on the landscape that’s not being maintained and so it’s not very productive and usually the critters get to them before you do,” he said. “Hazel is also important in basketry; it has a nice flexibility.”

The prevalence of commercial hazelnut orchards has had a detrimental effect, hybridizing with the native trees, Archuleta noted.

“The commercial ones are more brittle, so when we’re gathering, we have to do a lot of testing to make sure we’re getting the wild ones,” he said. “Because of the flexibility, hazel was also used in making rope.”

Wapato, a water plant also known as arrowleaf, was traditionally gathered by women wading in shallow ponds and lakes, pushing small gathering canoes. They would wade barefoot and use their feet to search out and loosen the tubers, which would float to the surface, where they could be gathered up and put into the canoes.

“The tuber is starchy, kind of like the Indian potato and you can put it on the coals and bake it that way; you can boil it,” he said.

Today, it is harder to obtain.

“We’ve been doing a lot of testing of different areas, the soil, the water, to be sure the areas we gather from are safe for consumption,” Archuleta said.

He noted that there are numerous other plants the Tribes relied on.

“This is just kind of a quick few top ones used for food and basketry,” he said. ■

‘Mobile vet clinic treats ‘rez dogs’ for free to prevent overpopulation’

(Editor’s note: It is estimated that there are approximately 149 billion videos on YouTube, and the number continues to grow. Grand Ronde Tribal member and Social Media/Digital Journalist Kamiah Koch sifts through those videos twice a month to recommend a worthwhile Indigenous video to watch. Follow her bimonthly recommendations and enjoy!)

Reservation dogs, common called “rez dogs,” are a staple across many Tribal reservations.

Grand Ronde has its own version of rez dogs, usually a family’s domesticated dog that has escaped its backyard and is seen running around Tribal housing. On other reservations, rez dogs live without the confines of a fence and are free-roaming members of the Tribal community. This also means that these dogs are often not vaccinated or spayed/neutered, leading to health concerns and overpopulation.

To combat that, First Nations Veterinary Director Gia Clemmer (Choctaw Nation) says they bring their mobile vet clinic to reservations to perform these necessary procedures.

Oregon Public Broadcasting followed First Nations Veterinary’s mobile clinic to the Warm Springs Reservation in central Oregon.

“Here on the Warm Springs Reservation, like so many other reservations, there is lack of access to veterinary care,” Clemmer said. “So, what we like to do is come up here and do 100 spay/neuters, which translates to about 300 births prevented.”

Clemmer advocates for high volume spay/neuter events like this because by reducing the overall population, it reduces animal suffering seen especially with rez dogs.

Former Warm Springs Tribal Council Vice Chair Aurolyn Stwyer is shown speaking to the volunteers at the mobile vet clinic about her Tribal Elder aunt who often spoke about how her people always took care of the four-legged friends.

“It’s been handed down in our generations,” Stwyer said. “She speaks very eloquently about how important it is that we look after the animals.”

At these mobile vet clinics, Tribal community members can bring cats and dogs to receive spay/neuter procedures, vaccinations, microchips and 12 months of flea and tick medication, all for free.

According to the First Nations Veterinary website, the mobile clinic visits several of the Oregon Tribal reservations including Grand Ronde later this year. You can visit their website to find out more.
